WHAT MAKES ASIAN HOSPITAL & HEALTHCARE MANAGEMENT THE BEST ADVERTISING PLATFORM?

The market for medical equipment and technology in Asia is booming. In excess of US$24 billion is being spent each year with major hospital construction projects underway in nearly all of the Asian countries. Government spending on the health sector is expected to grow at approximately 8-10% per annum.

A new private health sector is also emerging in response to growing demand for quality health services. Suppliers to the Asian healthcare markets anticipate a 20-30% growth rate over the next few years. The need for the latest technology, materials and know-how in Asia is therefore greater now than ever before.

Increasingly sophisticated management techniques and purchasing methods also mean that competition amongst suppliers is intense. Asian Hospital & Healthcare Management represents the most advanced networking of industry information ever published in the Asian markets and will be a required reading for hospital directors, administrators and medical practitioners in both the public and private sectors, together with top level representatives of Asia's health ministries.

Through its circulation list, Asian Hospital & Healthcare Management reaches the most powerful network of hospital decision-makers in the region. The purpose is to promote higher standards of healthcare by providing a forum for conference and convention with relevance to every aspect of hospital services, patient care and latest medical technology.

Agilent Technologies

Rapid, Powerful Techniques to Address Peptide Mapping Challenges in the Biopharma Industry

Tuesday, 31st October 2017, 2 PM Singapore Standard Time

This webinar will walk through the process and benefits implementing the use of Total Organic Carbon (TOC) in Pharmaceutical. We will talk through the use of TOC analysis in Pharmaceutical water, for performing Cleaning Validation, Replacing HPLC with TOC for CV, for checking the extractable and leachable organics from Plastics used in packaging of pharmaceutical products.

Synopsis:

With a steadily increasing number of recombinant proteins that are being developed as therapeutics there is an increasing demand to provide very exacting methods for validating the product. Unlike their small molecule counterparts there are many more analytical steps – and with them come more analytical challenges – involved in showing that the correct products have been made. Proteins can undergo a myriad of modifications each of which can have a profound effect on the efficacy and half-life of the protein. Some of these modifications are required and some are not, however all of them can vary depending on the growth conditions of the cell line that is being used to express them. Early process development focuses on the conditions of cell growth that provides the protein of the correct amino acid sequence and with the correct, intentional modifications (e.g., glycosylation, disulfide bond linkages). As this is scaled up it is vital to show that the fidelity of the product remains the same. Once this has been achieved then there will be the need for routine batch testing to provide evidence of reproducibility and batch-to-batch consistency.

One of the most widely used and highly applicable analytical techniques as part of the characterization is peptide mapping. This approach involves the isolation of the protein, controlled chemical modification, enzymatic digestion, separation of the resultant peptides and detection. Using this approach, it is possible to determine that the correct amino acid sequence has been obtained, identify many of the modifications (required and erroneous), all semi-quantitatively.

This webinar will describe the new approaches and technologies that are being used in each of the steps and how an efficient, reproducible and accurate workflow can be obtained.

We will talk through the use of TOC analysis in Pharmaceutical water, for performing Cleaning Validation, Replacing HPLC with TOC for CV, for checking the extractable and leachable organics from Plastics used in packaging of pharmaceutical products.

Participants will learn about:

- Application areas of TOC In Pharma industry
- Pharmacopelia compendia for TOC in UPW
- Monitoring leachable and extractable in plastics used for packaging the pharmaceutical product as per the new chapter of USP <661>.
- TOC used for Cleaning Validation
- Replacing HPLC with TOC for Cleaning Validation
- Benefits of at-line and online sampling

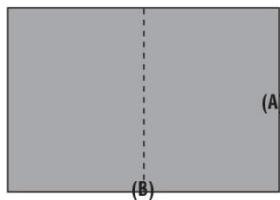

Participants will learn about various application areas where a TOC can help them to comply with all the regulatory requirements. This will help them to understand their process and needs which can be for a water system, or for a Cleaning Validation in lab/at-line/on-line; or to comply with USP 661 for plastic packaging systems.

Who should attend:

- QA personnel in the Pharmaceutical Industry
- QC personnel in the Pharmaceutical Industry
- Validation personnel in the Pharmaceutical Industry
- Operations personnel in the Pharmaceutical Industry
- Engineering teams in Pharmaceutical Industry
